Donncadh Ó h-Annagáin

Born in the house that once formed part of this site in 1887, Donncadh O'h-Annigan was one of the foremost leaders in the War of Independence and is credited with the establishment of the first Flying Column Active Service Units ever & led the East Limerick Brigade of the IRA during the War of Independence. Donncadh was the youngest of seven children whom through a scholarship in Albert College ended up in Dublin with a spell in Louth during 1916 training volunteers.

Unveiled by Senator Labhrás Ó Murchú, the plaque on the bridge in memory of Donncadh has been described as a symbolic gesture to a man who took the pro-Treaty side in the Civil War but spent the rest of his life endeavouring to heal wounds between old comrades.

Ó'h-Annagian became a key figure in establishing the Irish Defence Forces, during which time he rose to the rank of Major General. Later, he took up a civilian position with the Department of Defence.

One of the “stories” that arose during our research was that of Donncadh having disguised himself as a priest to visit republican prisoners in Limerick.

In the book “Limericks Fighting Story” he wrote

“ I wish to avail of this opportunity to pay tribute to the parish of Kilbehenny and Anglesboro [Gleann na gCreabhar], to the slopes of whose mountains we occasionally retired for rest and recuperation. . .”
